French Door

Introduction

For double doors where one door is active and the other stationary, select the active set and the matching dummy set. Then go to section 8A locks and latches to select the lock. Flush and surface bolts are used on for the inactive door to keep it stationary. Select a traditional surface slide bolt set or an antique style chain head bolt and foot bolt set. Measure the stile (page 14A-14) of the door to select a width that will fit. Flush bolts may be used on the edge of the inactive door when they need to be hidden. Surface bolts are normally longer on top and shorter on the bottom of the door. Select a length that is easily reached. The active door may have passage, privacy, or entry door functions.

For doors that will be used at the same time, ball or roller catches will hold the doors in place. These are mounted on the top edge of the door and fit into a catch plate on the door frame. The doorknobs on each door will be held in place with dummy spindles (pg. 6B-2). These are small brackets mounted on the surface of the door. Double doors may require doorknobs on both sides or only on the front side (ex. closets).
